PIONEERS—1942 BRAND
AMERICA'S PIONEERS have made her great across the ocean, over mountains, through deserts, over fathers' blood, a trail for freedom. Industry, and the scientific frontiers also have yielded to the determination of a courageous few who have dared to set up the nation's future.

As surely as the present has been molded by these pioneers of the past, so will the future be shaped on today's frontiers. The pioneers of yesterday pitied themselves against the rugged forces of nature, and won. The pioneers of today must conquer the lawless forces of human nature. This is the challenge for 1942. If these lawless forces cannot be conquered, if men cannot learn to work together and fight together for a new world, we face, even with military victory, constant repetition of world-wide chaos.

But human nature can be changed. Today's pioneers are bringing this hopeful message to America, and the leaders and people of the nation are welcoming it. Said Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas: "Faith in God, love of land, and a pioneer spirit once conquered a continent. Americans will fight for moral re-education as the next frontier movement in American history, and make the same sacrifices to carry it from coast to coast."

How can the average American join in this pioneering? There is a

NOAH: GOD'S COVENANT WITH MANKIND

GENESIS 9:1-17
Lesson Text: Genesis 9:1-17

God does not forget. He keeps His promise now just as He did in the days of Noah. Since our lesson of last Sunday a long period of time had elapsed. Generation after generation had come and gone, and all the while man grew more and more wicked. Finally, God saw that He must put an end to the corruption of the human race, and He decided to wipe out the wicked world with a flood. But He did not forget His promise to Noah, and He kept it. He gave Noah and his family a sign of His covenant with them, and He gave them a promise of His mercy and grace.

Alertness Keeps Farm Births Free of Rats

Constant Vigilance Is Way Menace Is Stopped
By R. E. GROSS
Use poison bait, fumigate, set traps or keep a good rat dog—but be sure to do something to protect your farm from the rat menace.

Rats multiply so rapidly that frequent attention to the problem is necessary all the time, and especially now when farm efficiency is playing an important part in the nation's food program.

Keep the farmstead free from all piles of waste material or supplies stacked in such a way as to offer shelter and food for rats. This is the first and most urgent measure. Supplies should be kept in rat-proof buildings or in stacks located away from buildings. Waste should be removed or destroyed.

Leave No Holes or Cracks. Repair foundations, floors and sills of buildings, leaving no holes or large cracks offering a start for gnawing. Foundations must be intact to a depth of two feet below ground level. Sheet metal or wire screen tacked over holes or cracks and to the edges of doors are a sure stop.

Wood walls are rat-proofed by covering with half-inch mesh wire screen to a height of four feet above the ground and placing a smooth strip of galvanized metal above the wire mesh.

Rats can burrow through decayed, crumbling concrete or even solid new concrete while it is still soft and moist. Everlasting diligence is required.

Suggestions on Plows

Before using a new plow, engineers suggest that the farmer measure the down suction and land suction of the share, and make a record of the measurements. Later, when the share needs sharpening, it can be given the same check-up of suction.

A wobbly rolling roller in the front of the plow makes a ragged job. Hence roller bearings should be added. Generally rollers are set to cut one-half to one inch wider than the share, and the width of two fingers above it.

Best position for the jointer on a plow is just far enough behind the roller hub to prevent dirt and trash wedging against it, and to cut a three-inch wide ribbon of soil about 4 inches wide and usually not more than 2½ inches deep. Farm engineers will have to pay when they stand before the seat of judgment of God. Even the animals who kill men are to be slain (v. 5). How much greater shall be the condemnation of the man who violates God's command.

But we see a third gift of God, designed to remove a deep fear from his heart, namely God's—

III. Promise (vv. 9-10).
God made a covenant with Noah and with his descendants and every living creature (vv. 9, 10). This is the third of God's eight covenants with man, beginning with the one to Adam in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 1:28), and closing with the new covenant (Hab. 3:2).

This was a promise of God's grace that there should be no more judgment by flood, and as a sign He chose the rainbow, which, appearing in the very time when rain should fall, would reassure men that a new flood was not coming upon them. What a beautiful symbol!

"I will remember," said God, and He has not forgotten. Though thousands of years have passed, there has never since been such a cataclysm of judgment. How unpepperyly precious it is to recall that God has not forgotten a single one of us; that He remembers every promise He has ever made; that He keeps every covenant. And on the contrary, how disturbing it must be to the unbeliever to realize that God has not forgotten his sin and iniquity, nor the judgment which is sure to come.

The story of Noah should stimulate our faith, causing us to trust God, to obey His every command, and to look to Him for His power in our lives, His protection over us, His promise of grace to all who believe.

Normal Loss

Shell Eggs Shipped to Isle Getting There OK
Shell eggs, produced on United States farms, are getting to Great Britain with losses in transit amounting to no more than normal losses in domestic shipping, says G. T. Klein, extension poultryman at Massachusetts State college.

This was indicated by a recent report to the British house of commons by Major Lloyd-George, undersecretary to the minister of foods, in which he stated losses amount to not more than 5.3 per cent.

These losses, says Mr. Klein, are largely due to spoilage and breakage and compare favorably with normal losses in shell eggs shipped from producing areas to consumers throughout the United States.

This should be good news to the American poultryman, who has wanted to know whether his eggs were reaching Great Britain without severe loss and in condition to be of use to the English people. Shipment of eggs under the Lend-Lease act has enabled the British government to increase allotments to stores and thus supply consumers with a greater number than they have had previously through the rationing system.

Farm Notes

Traitors and dormitories to be made available for temporary housing by the Farm Security administration under a recent presidential allocation of $13,000,000 will provide 12,500 dwelling units for workers in 25 war-industry areas. The U. S. department of agriculture says. Housing facilities in these areas are expected to be ready for occupancy early in March.

Canada, Has 4,000 Airwomen

Smart and serviceable are the new uniforms of the R.C.A.F. (Women's Division). This summer uniform (cloves) is a washable, light-colored dress of blue fabric, with a six-piece skirt and brass buttons. The sports uniform is light practical and attractive, as this photo-graph (at right) of a slender young airwoman demonstrates. The uniform is a neat gray-blue, with the shorts of fine cotton twill and the pullover of knitted cotton.

So, a woman must be to wear of medical category "A" or higher (equivalent to army standard A), at least five feet in height, of good build, of equal rank. It is modeled on the start of a large department store, now Airwoman. See-into class, in training for the trade of equipment assistant.

In that trade—which involves dealing with air force stores and equipment—in other capacities of which cook, hospital assistant, transport driver, parachute rigger, meteorologist, office worker and waitress are only a few, women of ability are enlisting to release men for more strenuous duties.

Taking the W.A.F. of the R.A.F. in pattern, the women's division act has enabled the British government to increase allotments to stores and thus supply consumers with a greater number than they have had previously through the rationing system.
